What Is BAR-BEN

It will pay you to read this and think it over carefully, especially if you have been troubled with "female diseases" and "prolonged" periods and are not better off today. We are reputable and successful, and we are respected in our own city. For over 20 years we have made a specialty of the nervous disorders of men and women. Our remedy is the result of many years' experience. BAR-BEN will not restore you in a night, nor a week, but with patience and the correct use of our treatment, we do assure you it will positively make you a man of you in time. BAR-BEN is for sale at all drug stores—a 50-cent box for 50 cents, one to two months' treatment. You need not be ashamed to ask for it. Its uses are many, and no matter what your object is in taking it, no one need be the wiser. If you prefer, send us $1.00 and we will forward a 50-cent box by mail, securely sealed, along with a few private words of advice to suit your individual case. In complicated cases of long vitality BAR-BEN may be taken at home, under our directions, or we will pay railroad fares and hotel bills to all who prefer to come to us for treatment. If we fail to cure, it will only cost you a stamp to learn full particulars, and it is up to you to yourself that you should write to-day. We answer all letters in plain envelope and hold all correspondence strictly confidential.

WOMEN used to think "female diseases" could only be treated after "medical examinations" by physicians. Dread of such treatment kept thousands of modest women silent about their suffering. Their introduction of Wine of Cardui has now demonstrated that nine-tenths of all the cases of menstrual disorders do not require a physician's attention at all. The simple, pure taken in the privacy of a woman's own home insures quick relief and speedy cure. Women need not hesitate now. Wine of Cardui requires no humiliating examinations for its adoption. It cures any disease that comes under the head of "female troubles"—disordered menses, falling of the womb, "whites," "chances of life." It makes women beautiful by making them well. It keeps them young by keeping them healthy. $1.00 at the drug store.

For advice in cases requiring special directions, address: "Wine of Cardui," The Chicago Medicine Co., Chicago, Tenn.

FRANCE'S BIG FAIR.

THE PARIS EXPOSITION OF 1900 ALREADY BEGINS TO TAKE SHAPE.

Some of the Principal Features of the Great Enterprise—Two Permanent Palaces in Course of Erection—Corn Husk Costumes From Kansas.

The year 1900 is still some little distance in the future, but the French are pushing on their exposition, which is to be held in Paris at the century's end, with as much energy as if it were only a month or two away. As a result the exposition has already begun to take definite shape. You may rest assured that Paris will have a world's fair well worth seeing, one which, although it may be unpatriotic to admit it, will fairly eclipse our exposition of five years ago at Chicago.

In shape and situation the world's fair of 1900 will resemble a huge letter "H" with the tops of the perpendiculars slightly approaching each other. The horizontal stroke represents the Seine from the Pont de la Concorde to the Pont d'Iena. This portion of the Seine will become the "Rue de Venise," with gondolas, caques and pleasure craft of every description. The quays of the northern bank of the Seine will be transformed into the "Rue de Paris," with scores of theaters, panoramas, novelties and attractions. The southern bank of the Seine will be set apart for the pleasure and amusement of foreign countries, and for the building of military and naval arts, and for maritime commerce, navigation and fisheries.

The eastern perpendicular of the H represents the Avenue Nicholas II, at right angles with and wider than the Avenue des Champs Elysees. Facing each other on the Avenue Nicholas II are the two vast structures called the Grand Palais and the Petit Palais, which are to be permanent edifices, solidly built for all time.

The western perpendicular of the H extends from the Trocadero palace across the Pont d'Iena, includes the Eiffel tower and the Champs de Mars and reaches to the Ecole Militaire. Screening the Ecole Militaire, the enormous Salle des Fêtes will be built, and in front of this the fairlike palace of Electricity, forming a splendid terminus for this great artery of the exhibition.

The principal building of the exhibition will be the Grand Palais, designed by M. Louvet, which will occupy 33,000 square meters of ground surface and is being erected on the west side of the Avenue Nicholas II. During the exposition the Grand Palais will be used for the exhibitions of painting, sculpture and music. The horse show will also take place in the Grand Palais. The foundations are terminated and the walls are already about 7 feet high. The pedestals of the columns measure 8 cubic meters and weigh 7,500 kilograms each. The massive architecture and imposing rows of splendid columns which characterize the Grand Palais designs are universally approved.

The Grand Palais and the Petit Palais are permanent structures of masonry. The material is the usual light colored building stone of Paris. Blocks from the Palais de l'Industrie are being employed in the construction of the Grand Palais and the Petit Palais, which are now rising from the debris of that familiar edifice.

The news of the death of the United States commissioner, Major Handy, was received with deep regret by M. Alfred Picard and the other exposition authorities. Meanwhile his duties are being performed by Colonel Chaille Long, who is zealously looking after the interests of American exhibitors. Colonel Long has already succeeded in acquiring additional space for the United States, and hopes to obtain even more. The United States has so far obtained 150,000 square feet, exclusive of what is to be secured in the special subject sections.

Among the novelties which will be seen in the American exhibit will be corn costumes from Kansas. These were first displayed at the big corn festival held in Ashland three years ago. Since then there has been such a demand for costumes made of corn husks that a unique industry has been established in that city. The Parisians, hearing of this novelty, made a request for this addition to the American exhibit, so several examples of corn dress-making and corn husk millinery will be shown.

A NOTED HAWAIIAN.

President Dole's Private Secretary Is Big and Talented.

One of the most noticeable figures in the little group of men who have accompanied President Dole about the country is that of Major C. P. Laukea.

MAJOR C. P. LAUKEA.

His private secretary, aid-de-camp and right hand man. Lots of people have wondered who he was, for he is a striking looking man. He is big and tall and looks like a man of distinction. His bearing is military and graceful. He is also modest and affable, but at the same time diplomatic. State secrets are safe with him, as the reporters have found out.

Secretary Laukea is a native Honolulu. He was but a lad of 19 when the royal rulers found that they needed his service. That was 22 years ago, and he has been in continuous service ever since. David Kalakaua, king of the Hawaiian Islands, was the first to take to the young man. He made him his chamberlain and private secretary. The king died and Queen Liliuokalani took the throne. Still Laukea held his place, and in a little while was promoted to the position of president of the land office. He was the agent of the crown lands until they were turned over to the people, and now he has charge of the public lands.

His first trip abroad was in 1883, when he represented his government at the coronation of the czar of Russia. The people at home and the powers that were had by this time come to recognize the statesmanlike qualities of the man, and they doubled his mission. He was sent to Japan and India in the interests of civilization before he returned to his native isles.

It happened that in 1887 he was the chamberlain and secretary of the queen, when the jubilee in London broke out. He took charge of the royal party, including the two queens, Liliuokalani and Lapiolani, and went over to the queen's jubilee. He says that is about the way it has been all the time, but that he has managed to enjoy life.

SENATOR HANNA'S SON.

Has Succeeded In Business, but Has Made a Failure of Matrimony.

Daniel R. Hanna, who has been brought before the public eye through the medium of the divorce courts, is the only son of Senator M. A. Hanna and is the virtual head of the extensive shipping, iron and coal business of the senator. Dan Hanna is almost as well known in Cleveland as his distinguished father. He belongs to the Union, Taverne, Century, Roadside and Country clubs and is a leader in the movements of the fashionable set of the Forest City.

His full name is Daniel Rhodes Hanna. He was named after his maternal grandfather. Though only about 33 years old, he has shown himself to be a man of much business ability. He is blond and good looking. He bears considerable resemblance to his father, though he is three or four inches taller. Indeed, he is one of the tallest men in Cleveland. He spends money freely and belongs to the "sporty" or "horsey" class of wealthy young men.

Mrs. Hanna was Carrie May Harrington. She is about 30, 5 feet 6 inches tall and dark and beautiful. No brunette in Cleveland is handsomer. Her family moved there from Detroit not long before the marriage. They had been poor, but at or about that time the father inherited money from a sister.

Carrie May was the youngest child. She and young Hanna were members of a sailing party up the lakes. Both were scarcely more than children. They fell in love, and at an upper lake party they left the boat and were married in Escanaba, Mich. This was in 1887. Some time later they announced the wedding. The Hannas were disappointed, but made the best of it.

The young couple have always moved in the best of society and until lately seemed to get along well together. Though much given to society, Mrs. Hanna has won the respect of all by her devotion to her children.

THE BEAR IN CHINA.

WHY RUSSIA OBJECTS TO THE OPENING OF TA-LIEN-WAN.

The Long Fight to Keep the Railroad Out of the Flowery Kingdom Given Up at Last—The Bear's Plans for an Eastern Gibraltar.

Just now the most important feature of the squabble over the opening of China is the withdrawal of England's demand that Ta-Lien-Wan be made a free port and her reasons for making that demand in the first place. It was a shrewd British move to checkmate Russia.

As is well known, the pet project of the czar is to make Port Arthur, which he has recently acquired, an oriental Gibraltar. The reason he desires to have such a stronghold in the far east is because he plans to make the terminal of the Trans-Siberian railroad an important strategic point. He is pushing forward with all haste his railroad, the greatest enterprise of the kind ever undertaken.

Great Britain's demand that Ta-Lien-Wan should be made a treaty port knocked from the czar's mind the idea of an open port. He is pushing forward with all haste his railroad, the greatest enterprise of the kind ever undertaken.

It was that consideration that impelled Russia not only to protest against the opening of Ta-Lien-Wan, but actually to threaten China with force to prevent her from making such a concession. She does not wish to find, after building a railroad from the Ural to the Yellow Sea, the only satisfactory terminus checkmated by a port through which British and Japanese ships. On the other hand, Great Britain and Japan, while freely granting Russia's right to access to those waters, sought to prevent her having a monopoly of the northern bulwarks of the entrance way to Peking for the undisputed purpose of transforming them into a Russian fortress.

While this controversy is being thrashed out, it is of interest to observe that the work of the engineer is being pushed in various parts of the empire which was so long sealed against such innovations. It was as long ago as 1893 that the first Chinese railroad was projected, but it was never built, the opposition of the mandarins proving too strong. The second attempt was at first successful. A line was built in 1876 from Shanghai to Woo-Sung and actually put into operation. But the natives were scandalized by such an exhibition of the black arts of the "foreign devil" and literally rose in rebellion against it, so that for the sake of peace the rails had to be torn up and the whole enterprise abandoned. One of the plans was to build the railroad from the mouth of the Yangtze to the Yangtze-Kiang and still lies rusting at the bottom of that river. It was perhaps a good thing that that road did not prosper, for it was of narrow gauge—only 3 feet 6 inches—and it would have been a misfortune to have that established as the standard gauge throughout the empire.

The first successful railroad was built by Li Hung Chang in 1881. That far-sighted statesman determined to introduce into the empire what he recognized to be one of the most valuable adjuncts of civilization, and he undertook to do it on his own account and on his own property. He got money from his own pocket, but in the north, in 1881, and built a railway to connect them with the nearest canal. This was worked by horsepower, but it demonstrated the value of such a roadway. Then, in 1888, he had the railway transformed into a steam railroad. The story of that work is a most romantic one.

The chief engineer was an Englishman, a Mr. Kinder. He was compelled to work by stealth, as though he were committing some great crime. He had to build the first locomotive secretly, out of such scraps of machinery as he could pick up. He got some small driving wheels as scrap castings and a boiler from a workman station engine, while a local wheelwright furnished him with a cylinder and piston. When the thing was only half done, the authorities got wind of it and ordered work stopped at once, and it took all of Li's tact and diplomacy to get the order revoked and permission given for the completion of the line on his own private grounds.

It was not long before the dowager empress became interested in the enterprise, and she and Li together got the government to consent to an extension of the line under official control. It was first extended to Lu-Tai, then to Peh-Tang and Taku, then to Tien-tsin and finally to a point on the coast beyond Shan-Hai-Kwan, its present limit. It is now, however, to be prolonged northward and eastward, to connect with the Russian system at Kirin.

The plans for the Russian railroads in China are extensive. A branch is to be run from the Siberian line to a point on the little coast of Lake Baikal down through Mongolia and Manchuria to Kirin, but not touching the sacred city of Mukden, which is to be entered only by the Chinese line. Thence it is to branch in two directions. One branch will run north and east to Vladivostok, and the other southward to Port Arthur, there finding the terminal so long desired. A better could not be wished. The port is a commodious one, already supplied with fine docks and shipyards. It is always free from ice. It is capable of being fortified into a practically impregnable state. There is a good supply of fresh water at hand for shipping. It is an ideal place for either a naval station or a commercial emporium. If Russia could make the approach to it along the peninsula secure she would be satisfied. To make it this secure is the task she has in hand, and an uncommonly hard task it appears to be.

GOLD AND KNOWLEDGE.

Here Are the Things For Which Mrs. Crane Goes to Alaska.

Mrs. Alice Rollins Crane, who is now on her way toward the goldfields of Alaska, goes there for a threefold purpose. In the first place she goes as an accredited commissioner of the bureau of American ethnology of the Smithsonian institution. In the second place she goes as a magazine writer, with pen and kodak in hand, and thirdly she goes as an argonaut, looking for a golden fortune. Mrs. Crane is a distinguished member of the Southern California Academy of Sciences and is, besides, a writer of ability and a student of Indian life and folklore.

"I have no fixed or definite plan," she says, "aside from my intention to go into the heart of the Alaskan wild, and see all that is to be seen and hear all that there is to hear. If what I see and what I hear enable me to grasp a fortune from the store of hidden wealth along the streams and rivers and among the mountains, I will not complain."

"I will be frank enough to confess to a theory or belief—call it which you will—that is an incentive to my desire for adventure. For years I have lived among and studied the lives and customs of the Indians in California, Arizona, New Mexico and old Mexico. It has been my good fortune to come to know an Indian as he knows himself. This knowledge has taught me that what a real man does not know of nature's secrets is hardly worth knowing. If the best of Alaska's water courses are paved with nuggets of gold, you may rest assured that the fact has been known to the Indians of Alaska for generations. If they know it, I shall know it, and knowing it will profit by the knowledge."

SORROW HER LOT.

The Little Girl Who May Some Day Be Queen of Spain.

The little Archduchess Elizabeth, whose betrothal to Alfonso XIII, the boy king of Spain, was recently announced, is the granddaughter of Francis Joseph, emperor of Austria. She is only 15 years old, but has already had her share of trouble. In her thus far brief life tragedy has chased scandal and scandal her lot.

Her father was Crown Prince Rudolph, whose tragic death, by murder or suicide, at Mayerling, after a life of escapades, was one of the most extraordinary stories of his generation. Her mother, Crown Princess Stephanie, is the daughter of the king of Belgium, a woman erratic as the wind, whose acts have frequently given rise to scandals and who has never shown a mother's love for her child.

Were it not for the affection of the aged emperor, who has been not only a father but a companion and playfellow of the little heiress to his throne, her life would have been far from happy. She was born—the child of a loveless marriage—on Sept. 2, 1883, and was named Elizabeth Marie Henriette Stephanie Gisela. She took her first communion when 12 years old in the chapel of the imperial palace at Vienna. At the conclusion of the ceremony

she gave her mother the cut direct, and walking up to the old emperor was clasped in his arms and covered with affectionate kisses.

By Rudolph's will she was made the ward of her grandparents, and nobody was surprised or displeased, unless it was Stephanie herself, who never showed any signs of anger at this post mortem evidence of the crown prince's sentiments regarding his wife.

Should she become the consort of the youthful king of Spain, who is three years her junior, she will likely find more trouble awaiting her in trying to rest easy upon that tottering throne.

A Woman's Deed.

A BENEFACTRESS WHO IS DOING INCALCULABLE GOOD.

Devotes Much of Her Time to the Benefits of Children—How She Helps Them.

From the Evening News, Detroit, Mich.

Mrs. John Tansey, of 130 Baker Street, Detroit, Michigan, is one of those women who always know just what to do in all trouble and sickness. One that is a mother to those in distress. To a reporter she said:

"I am the mother of ten children and have raised eight of them. Several years ago we had a serious time with my daughter, which began when she was about sixteen years old. She did not have any serious illness but seemed to gradually waste away. Having never had any consumption in our families, as we come of good old Irish and Scotch descent, we did not think it was that disease. Neither did she have a hacking cough, yet she grew thinner and paler each day. Our doctor called the disease by an old name which, as I afterward learned, meant lack of blood.

"They helped her wonderfully, and undoubtedly saved her life. She now recommends them to other young women. 'Every mother in this land should keep these pills in the house, as they are good for many other ailments. I don't believe in doctoring and never spent much money in Y, which I understood contained in a condensed form all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. Before she had taken half a box, there was a decided change, and after three months' treatment you would have recognized her, as her health was so greatly improved. She gained in flesh rapidly and soon was in perfect health. I have always kept the pills in the house since and have recommended them to every one I could. I have told many mothers about them and they have made some wonderful cures. One of the girls had a young lady friend that came to the house almost every day, and she was a sight. Honestly, she seemed almost transparent. I did not care to have my daughters associate with her, as I was afraid she would drop dead some day when they were out on the street. I recommended and begged her to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and told her of their sterling qualities and how the post was slight, being only 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, at any druggist's. Finally I induced her to try them.
